Cops: Rockland man kills wife

A Rockland man was arraigned on murder charges Thursday after allegedly admitting to stabbing his wife in a jealous rage after he found a "sexual" text message from another man on her phone.

Police said Richard Langley, 56, was smoking a cigarette on his front steps Wednesday night as his wife lay dying in a pool of blood nearby. According to court papers, Langley allegedly said, "Die, [expletive], die," as he was led past her body by police. METRO

Abramson to teach at Harvard

The recently ousted executive editor of The New York Times will soon be imparting her words of wisdom to Harvard University students.

Jill Abramson will join the Cambridge university as a visiting lecturer, the school said on Thursday.

The New York Times fired Abramson last month and the Times in its own article called the move "unexpected." Abramson was the newspaper's first female executive editor, a post she held since 2011.

Abramson is a 1976 Harvard graduate and will start her new role when the 2014-15 academic year begins. Harvard said she will teach undergraduate courses on narrative nonfiction. METRO Small screen. More major TV networks are banking on the Bay State to bring in viewers.

When John Griffin got into real estate, he knew the homes in his Massachusetts territory had a lot of personality, but what he hadn't considered was how enigmatic the personalities of the homeowners were.

"There's not many developments where it's cookie-cutter neighborhoods with the same house and same style, and I feel like the same goes for the actual homeowners," says Griffin, who along with his brother Danny are the focus of "60 Seconds to Sell," a real estate reality show starting on A&E this Saturday. "For me these characters are a big difference from what I'm seeing on TV now."

Television audiences' interest in Bay State characters has been surging lately, with "Wahlburgers" and "Boston's Griffin's "60 Seconds to Sell" is produced by Somerville-based Powderhouse Productions, which also produced the reality sitcom, "Southie Rules."

The show features brothers John and Danny Griffin, both real estate agents who sell houses at auction, a risky practice for homeowners that is rife with drama. But the tension is cut by their effortless Boston humor, similar to the characters played by Ben Affleck in "Good Will Hunting" and Alec Baldwin in "The Departed," secondary characters who deserve the spotlight.

"We kept asking the producers if they wanted us to turn up the accents," recounts John Griffin. "They kept saying, 'No you're fine.'"

"The McCarthys," a sitcom premiering this fall on CBS, is based on the family of Brian Gullivan, who grew up in Dedham and performed at Boston's Improv Asylum for several years before joining the cast of Chicago's famed Second City.

"In Chicago I had more time to work on my comedy, as an actor and as a writer," says Gullivan, "although I would always end up doing Boston scenes and develop these Boston characters."

Second City also helped Gullivan find Internet fame as a character called Sassy Gay Friend. He then moved to L.A. and wrote for "Happy Endings," the devastating cancellation of which enabled Gullivan to find a happy new beginning, bringing Boston scenes with Boston characters to a broader audience. Gullivan created "The McCarthys," sold it to CBS and is staying on as an executive producer and writer. He held the first writers' meeting this week.

"I think everyone is interested in, and I'd even say obsessed with Boston," he says. "It's such a specific place that even if you're not from there, characters who are from there already seem to be more specific and interesting than characters from other places."

Delivery truck hits, kills woman in Davis Square

Fatal crash. An elderly Medford woman died after being struck.

An elderly Medford woman was killed after being run over by a delivery truck in Davis Square on Thursday morning.

Helen Monagle, 90, died at Mount Auburn Hospital in Cambridge after the crash, Somerville police said.

Emergency crews were called to the intersection of Holland and Dover streets in Somerville at about 10:20 a.m. for a report of an accident. Police shut down parts of Davis Square for hours during the investigation.

A 24-year-old Melrose man was driving the FedEx truck that hit Monagle.

"Our heartfelt thoughts are with all of those involved in [Thursday's] incident. Safety is of the utmost importance to FedEx, and we are cooperating with the authorities as we try to determine what happened," FedEx said in a statement.

The incident is being investigated, police said.

"It is unfortunate for the community that we have to report this accident," Somerville Police Chief Charles Femino said. "The exact circumstances of how and why this accident occurred remain under investigation."

Paycheck. Senate votes to hike minimum wage to $11 per hour by 2017

Dozens rallied outside the McDonald's on Tremont Street in March calling for higher wages for workers in the fast-food industry. / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

Low-wage workers in Massachusetts can look forward to making more money over the next three years.

The Massachusetts Senate voted 35-4 on Thursday to pass legislation that will raise the minimum wage in three increments from $8 an hour to $11 an hour.

The hourly minimum wage would go to $9 on Jan. 1, 2015, to $10 the following new year, and finally to $11 on Jan. 1, 2017.

The measure does not include a provision for future annual increases to keep up with inflation.

Massachusetts members of Business for a Fair Minimum Wage, a Boston-based network of business owners and executives, commended the hike, which many have described as a House-Senate compromise.

"A higher minimum wage will boost sales, keep more dollars circulating in our local economy and reduce the strain on our social safety net caused by poverty wages," said Holly Sklar, the network's director.

Tsarnaev lawyers seek to relocate trial

In a court filing Wednesday, Tsarnaev's attorneys said they intend to file a change of venue motion, and asked a judge to push back the deadline to file the motion from June 18 to Aug. 3, claiming they need more time to examine local media coverage of the terror attack and its fall out.

"The defense has now completed sufficient preliminary research to determine that a change of venue motion should be filed; however, additional and detailed expert analysis of the venue research and media surrounding this case is required to support a motion to change venue," defense attorneys said in court papers.

A person accused of federal crimes is typically required to face trial in the district where the crimes were committed, except in cases where potential jurors may be swayed by pre-trial publicity. MORGAN ROUSSEAU

It was a good many days

"22 Jump Street" was also another chance for Hill and Tatum to spend time with Ice Cube, who plays their angry chief. But Hill wasn't afraid to pester one of his heroes with endless questions. "I grew up in Los Angeles in the '80s, so Ice Cube and Magic Johnson were who I idolized," Hill says.

Channing Tatum and Jonah Hill reunite for the sequel to "21 Jump Street." / GETTY IMAGES

They're just better together

Reunion. Jonah Hill and Channing Tatum talk about their chemistry and bugging the hell out of Ice Cube.

Jonah Hill is trying to pinpoint the exact scene in 2012's "21 Jump Street" when he knew he had chemistry with Channing Tatum.

"I mean, I would say the first scene," Tatum offers.

"We hit it off right away," Hill says, more seriously. One of the first scenes they shot wound up being the one that features Johnny Depp making a cameo as his character from the '80s Fox show. "We were supposed to jump over this couch, and Chan immediately did this flip over it. And then I walked around it. I think that set the standard for the two movies: that one guy is really good at stuff and the other is not."

The new "22 Jump Street" — which takes their not-so-young undercover cops to college to bust another drug ring — plays on the ideas of sequels, exploring the anxieties about not wanting to repeat the first. For Hill, it was a chance to refine what he did before.

"I felt more creatively inspired to think of the most clumsy way to do each stunt," Hill says. "You're putting together a puzzle to find how one would obviously do something, then ask yourself, 'How can I completely mess that up?'"

For Tatum, this was another chance to prove that his comedic turn in the first was no fluke. But when asked if he's up to Hill's improv skills, he's honest: "Absolutely not. I've only seen one person — and she's in the movie — be able to make Jonah even take a little step back. And that was Jillian Bell," he says, referring to the actress who plays the insult-firing roommate of a student with whom Hill's character sleeps.

"She brings the pain with him. I don't have many scenes with her, so I was excited when I did, even though I knew I was going to take some hits along the way. I knew it would be like being in the ring with Muhammad Ali and Joe Frazier and just being like, 'What's going to happen?'"

Hill says making room for other people to be funny is one thing he learned from Judd Apatow and Seth Rogen. "Jillian Bell's part was, as one of the writers, I would say incredibly underwritten," Hill explains. "When Jillian came in and auditioned, we started improvising and she made the part her own. That's what actors should do, if it's a comedy or drama. She made the part great. It wasn't written great."

"That's the fun of being an actor or a producer or whatever: You get to see people turn something bland into something wonderful."

These kids understand fair play. Why doesn't Quincy District Court?

In courts across Massachusetts, some powerful people used to abuse the process of choosing candidates for the best jobs. Now courts are striving to make sure hiring procedures are transparent and fair for everyone.

Except in Quincy District Court.

The court posted an opening for the chief probation officer job. But none of the qualified candidates made the grade. The court posted the job again; same result. Now the job is open again, for the THIRD TIME. No other court has had this problem. Were all of the candidates unqualified—or is someone playing favorites?

Probation officers are good, dedicated people doing dangerous, challenging jobs, keeping our neighborhoods safer. This isn't about any individual probation officer.

It's about powerful people playing games in secret.

It's just not that funny anymore

Back again. "How to Train Your Dragon 2" only has about five jokes in it, which may be a good thing.

Sequels come in two flavors: repeats of the first or continuing sagas that build to a franchise. "22 Jump Street" does the former, but does so with a self-awareness that calls into question the existence of sequels in the first place. "How to Train Your Dragon 2" may be even more extreme in that regard. Instead of another lighthearted tale of cute dragons tamed by goofy teens like its 2010 predecessor, it goes in a completely different, much darker and more dramatic direction. It's as if Tim Burton's "Batman" was followed by Christopher Nolan's "The Dark Knight Rises."

OK, it's not that extreme. "How to Train Your Dragon 2" is merely more serious, even tragic, than its predecessor. Where that film had scores of jokes, this has about five. Where the first detailed how a nebbishy kid, Hiccup (with the voice of Jay Baruchel), went from zero to hero, here he has to deal with a larger threat to his dragon-loving Viking community: a menacing despot (Djimon Hounsou) who seeks to harness and control all of the world's dragons to do his evil deeds. Hiccup also deals with meeting the grave environmentalist mother he never knew (voiced by Cate Blanchett), who reads her lines as though she's doing Ibsen.

What it does retain from the first is a visual handsomeness, with dark colors frequently interrupted by flames. The action, from dragon flying to heavy battles, is clean and kinetic and a reminder that live-action action these days too often goes for quicksilver editing that favors thrills over sense. Meanwhile, animators like to give you clear views of their handiwork. Odd though the tonal shift between the two films is, the po-facedness of "How to Train Your Dragon 2" becomes absorbing — or at least diverting. Like the first, it's solid but instantly forgettable. It could change things up even more for the third outing, and few would notice the difference.

Missed opportunities sink 'Smart People'

Review. The Huntington Theatre's latest doesn't follow through on its title.

"Smart People" begins with a slow, dull Act 1 that employs cliché devices like the flashback to set up the big reveal in the second act. Thankfully, Act 2 has some funny moments, but the piece always feels like a sitcom about nothing that features four borderline-loathsome narcissists. We've seen that before.

It's supposed to be a "controversial" and "fiercely funny" play, according to the Huntington Theatre's website. It's not. Huntington playwright fellow Lydia Diamond seems eager to poke the proverbial hornet's nest in her tale of four Harvard intellectuals grappling with race, genetics, love and other complexities of being human. But any time she gets close to the core of these issues, she reverts back to pedestrian dialogue that feels like typical three-jokes-per-page sitcom fare.

In one of the funniest scenes, Brian White (yes, there's a liberal white guy whose last name is White), calls upon fellow rich, smart white folks to hold the mirror up to racism in their own lives. A searing probe courtesy of an all-out war at the dinner table could've brought the house down at this point, while (almost) compensating for earlier lines like, "See? White men can jump." But Diamond instead opts to laugh at the overachieving Asian woman's inability to nurture.

She also veers close to explosive territory by questioning whether African-American surgical resident Jackson Moore is the victim of racism or suffering from the fall-out of being an angry black man with a chip on his shoulder. It's more potentially great drama that never happens.

While there's plenty of laughter, it's largely thanks to the stellar acting chops of Miranda Craigwell and McKinley Belcher III. Without them, you'd be left with a script that never reaches its potential.

Thicke continues his stalker behavior

It's usually non-famous people who stalk famous people, but we have the exception that makes the rule right here: Robin Thicke just keeps finding ways to get his soon-to-be ex-wife Paula Patton back. His latest attempt is to call his next album "Paula." What ever happened to releasing a self-titled album? This musical stalking thing has gotten out of hand! He's written songs about her, is talking about her onstage every chance he gets — and now this. Can't you two just work it out in private? That way your fans can get fun hits just like "Blurred Lines" on your next album, instead of creepy stalking love songs.

Bieber obsessing over Gomez

Social media is the bane of the fickle heart, as Justin Bieber is proving with his erratic postings pertaining to on-again, off-again girlfriend Selena Gomez. While it seemed that the couple finally split for good a few months ago, Bieber doesn't seem so sure. Just this week, he posted a close-up photo of the two in an embrace with the caption, "Our love is unconditional." Suggesting a tentative Romeo, he quickly deleted the post — but not before many of his 16 million Instagram followers screen-grabbed it and re-posted it.

Jennifer Lopez is now a 'fitness robot'

Jennifer Lopez recently split from choreographer boyfriend Casper Smart, but apparently it's not for the reason you might think. Sources tell Radar Online that Smart got fed up with how much of a "fitness robot" the "Jenny from the Block" singer had become, even though she was already in shape. "Jennifer's obsession with her own body is out of control. There's no doubt she's worked herself into the ground to achieve her killer shape," a source explains. "In the end, Jen and Casper had nothing else to talk about except diet and exercise stuff, and that was exactly how she wanted it."

In 2012, indie band Here We Go Magic tweeted that they'd picked up a hitchhiking John Waters in Ohio. It wasn't a fluke incident — that adventure and more form the basis of Waters' book about his travels, "Carsick: John Waters Hitchhikes Across America." While the "in conversation" part of the evening with him at the Brattle sold out, you can still meet the legendary filmmaker at a book signing in the afternoon.

The four members of local Americana group the Pennies play 10 instruments between them. Their charmingly deadpan bio notes that "Everyone sings but Caroline is the best so she sings the most," and provides a straightforward list of their lyrical subjects: "Love, heartbreak, the moon, trains, quarries, the devil, disasters, ghosts, the weather and the undead." It sounds like they've got it all covered!

Some things should really stay personal

Re: 'I'm proud of who I am' (Metro, June 10) Here's my question on this article: Why is it that now anyone who is gay or transgender feels the need to inform anyone who'll listen what their status is? Where is the filter on personal information in this world now? Do I really need to know who's gay and who's transgender? I have no need for that much personal knowledge of some one I don't know or care to know about. People like that need to get over themselves, it's not that damn serious. I'm straight — do I feel the need to announce to the world that I'm straight every time I walk in a room? No, because who really cares. There was definitely something more newsworthy than his sex change.

I know the paper is free, and you get what you pay for, but in the future could you please spare those of us who are who are actually looking for news from the fluff pieces.

If Obama really cared about students, he'd make jobs, not debt limits

Re: 'Obama easing school debt law' (Metro, June 10) Obama makes a big to-do about allowing more people limit repayments of federal student loans to 10 percent of their monthly incomes while scolding the Republican strawman for being against students.

This grandiose executive order will not, however, take effect until December 2015. If this man were capable of actually creating jobs, then there would be no need for college graduates to be subjected to minimum wage jobs upon graduation — or no jobs at all.

You gotta love progressives.

Dustin Pedroia and the Red Sox have not had much luck at the plate of late.
GETTY IMAGES

MLB. The Red Sox haven't gotten the job done at the plate this season and it's the main reason they sit below .500 in 2014.

The Red Sox have plenty of issues these days, but it's clear that Boston's struggles at the plate far outweigh their problems on the mound.

In their series in Baltimore to start the week, the Sox had a grand total of one run in three games. They somehow garnered a win out of that offensive output, a 1-0 victory on Tuesday.

The weak offensive performance is nothing new for the Sox in this bizarre 2014 season. Boston has scored five runs or more in just 25 of 65 games this season.

- T.J. House (0-1, 5.24 ERA) will get the start for Cleveland Saturday (4 p.m., NESN) while the Red Sox are scheduled to send Jake Peavy (1-4, 4.76 ERA) to the hill.
- In a Sunday matinee (1:30 p.m., NESN), Corey Kluber (6-4, 3.35 ERA) is slated to go for the Indians while Brandon Workman (1-0, 2.86 ERA) is slotted to work for Boston.

POPULARITY OF SOCCER IN US WILL REMAIN LOW

It's the world's biggest and longest sporting party and we've always been the kid in the corner too afraid to dance or do a keg stand.

The United States is the oddball at the big dance that is the World Cup, because we still (after decades and decades) haven't realized that soccer, (ahem) futbol, is "the best game on Earth."

That's not to say there won't be great interest here in the monthlong extravaganza that's already underway in Brazil. The TV ratings will be through the roof, even in the States.

Personally, I haven't been this psyched for a soccer tournament since our Essex County U-12 jamboree in 1994. Not so coincidentally, that was also the year the U.S. hosted the World Cup. That was also the year that the hardcore soccer fan convinced the casual U.S. sports fan that in 20 years, soccer would be the most popular game in the country. Sorry Taylor, Trevor and Justin. It just never worked out that way.

The world's futbol is an afterthought here, while American football is more popular than ever.

Those who believe the NFL's "concussion crisis" will bring its popularity to a halt are mistaken. New helmets will be invented. New rules will be put in place. And in the year 2034, the NFL will still be king.

Football, the one with the pointy ball, is the sports equivalent of oil in this country. We're addicted, and although there are safer and more efficient ways of getting our sports fix, we won't quit it. Not in the lifetime of anyone who's reading this.

Don't feel too bad, though, you soccer people. In 1994, we were also told the metric system would be the preferred method of measurement in the U.S. We were told gas-powered cars and also gas stations would be nowhere to be seen in 2014. Soccer being the No.

In World Cup host country Brazil, soccer is the be-all and end-all. Not so much here in the United States. / GETTY IMAGES

1 sport in the country in 20 years wasn't the only empty promise.

Look, change is obscenely hard in this country, as any story relating to Washington, D.C., these days will show.

Change is even harder when the constituent seeking change has its own internal problems.

ESPN's Jeremy Schaap delivered one of the all-time fascinating, yet chilling, reports in the sports network's history

BURKE

MATTHEW.BURKE@METRO.US

in order for giant soccer-only stadiums and mini-cities to be built in time for the games in eight short years. Hundreds of workers have already reportedly died. There's also likely a major bribery investigation going down soon. It's the kind of stuff that would make the NCAA and International Olympic Committee blush.

Those bumper stories are sure to be pushed to the backseat while the games in Brazil continue these next few weeks. The games always get more attention, whether it's in the United States, Brazil, Europe or Ghana.

These next few weeks are going to be awesome to watch. Even if you don't appreciate soccer as a game, the spectacle itself is worth viewing.

Just don't expect this World Cup to be the start of some futbol revolution in the U.S. Our role is to stand silent in the corner, remember?

NFL. Falcons to appear on HBO's 'Hard Knocks' this coming August

HBO's popular reality series "Hard Knocks," which features one NFL team per year during training camp, will follow around the Atlanta Falcons later this summer.

The Falcons actually jumped at the opportunity to have their practices and team meetings video taped by HBO cameras.

"We are excited about the opportunity to give our fans a behind-the-scenes look at what it takes to prepare an NFL team for the rigors of a 16-game regular season and beyond," Falcons owner

Arthur Blank told ESPN.

The NFL instituted a rule after it proved difficult to find a team willing to participate in "Hard Knocks" last year. The league can force a team to appear on the show if: 1. The team has a new head coach; 2. The team made the playoffs in one of the previous two seasons; or 3. The team has appeared on the show in the past 10 years.

The Bears, Bills, Cardinals, Giants, Jaguars, Raiders, Rams and Steelers were eligible to be featured this year, but the Falcons were more than willing to raise their hands.

Atlanta struggled through a 4-12 season in 2013 after making the NFC Championship game the season prior. METRO
